

Hochschule Darmstadt University of Applied Sciences

English-taught classes in Applied Social Sciences

Individual research projects in one of these areas

- Citizen beliefs and attitudes on the colonial past
- Determinants of willingness-to-pay for MSC-certified Golden Redfish (Sebastes norvegicus)
- Utilization of digital services offered by local governments by low-income citizens
- Using the theory of planned behaviour to explain the privacy paradox in social media users
- Acceptance of semi-industrial apple plantations to foster the regional resource base for hard cider production
- Beliefs on the effectiveness of the criminal prosecution of online insults and hate speech

Topics may be assigned individually or in small teams of at most 6 students • number of credits: up to 10 • bachelor's or master's level (prerequisites: skills in qualitative and quantitative social science research)

For more information, please write an email to jan.barkmann@h-da.de (professor).